There is a Free Lunch

By Deb Kelly

I think we have all heard the exact opposite of that saying when we were growing up by our parents, but what happened to me is proof that at some times you can get something for free. The winter of 2004-2005 has been pretty tough on most of us unless you like to ski or you are into perverted forms of pain and agony caused by shoveling snow, slipping on the stairs or the walk, or pushing the car out of a snow bank On Sunday, March 13, 2005, I have a severe case of cabin fever. I wanted to dress in the worst possible way.

My girlfriend wanted to go to the Flower Show in Boston and she wanted me to go. I thought to myself "This would be a good place to dress, and she will go along with it".

Was I ever wrong, I got shot down on that when I broached the subject. Late Sunday afternoon, after my girlfriend left, I said I am going to dress.

Thankfully, I shaved my legs on Saturday so I all I needed to do was to shave my face, which only took a few moments. My make up did not take to long to do and it only took a few seconds to brush the wig and style it. I dressed in what I call classic Debra.

This would be black knee length skirt, pink blouse, along with a gray jacket. I had on a lacy black slip underneath and black stockings along with pumps. For some of you that know me, I live in an apartment complex and in my building there are three other units. There are several teenagers that live here so there is activity all of the time, there are times that getting out of here can be a real challenge, but today has been rather quiet. No doors slamming and people running up and down the stairs and no one in the laundry room next door. I had just put on my slip and was starting to apply my make up when everybody came back. However, I wanted to get out. I looked outside

...I started to think

and it was clear. There were no doors opening and closing. Everybody was upstairs. I left in broad daylight and the only doors that slammed were my unit's door, the outside door, and my car door. Today, I decided to go to the Prudential Center. There is a good Barnes & Nobles located there along with several nice stores. I was able to get a parking space about 2 minutes away. I was able to avoid wearing an overcoat and that probably helped me out further in the story. I got into the Prudential Center, but I had to go to the ladies room to touch up my hair and my make up. From past experience, there are very nice bathrooms over at the Sheraton Hotel on the main floor and they are very clean and safe to use. I walked over near the escalator at the hotel near the ladies room. I observed that there was some type of convention going on. There were people who were dressed similar to what I was wearing. There was a check in line near the coatroom and there was a sign indicating that this was some type of trade show for seafood products. I saw a man in a chef's hat so I knew that there was food there. I went to the ladies room and on my way in I saw that you could gain access to the show from that end. It was roped off, but you could get thru. There was a security person or staffer there talking to someone, but it appeared that they were not really paying attention. I started to think about crashing this event. I came out of the ladies room and started to look a little closely. It appeared that there were people from all over the country attending this so there was some confusion with the staff. I saw that the security person was gone so I headed back to the direction of the ladies room, but instead of taking a right turn, I turned left and went by the rope. I got in with out any trouble. It turned out that there was really no security. The only people wearing badges were the event staff. These people could learn from

FROM THE EDITOR'S DESK

By Cheryl Easton

Maybe you heard about the 10 year old girl in Methuen who decided that she was really a he and came back from school vacation with a male name and dressed in male clothing. It was a big story not only around here, but nationally. Talk shows, newspaper editorials and the like were filled with this story.

Of course there were charges of bad child going through a phase, bad parents, bad school system allowing the child to do this, the decline of the morals in the entire free world and so on. Well let me go back about 7 months ago on a Tuesday night when it was my turn to cover the desk and be Receptionist for the night at TCNE.

Part of the duty is to listen to the answer machine for messages left when we're not around. I called back a woman who was having trouble with her daughter and she explained to me that since being in her crib, her daughter had rejected all things female and insisted on wearing boys clothing and wanted to be called by a boys name. The parents were beside themselves in not knowing what to do and where to turn to help their child. So the Mother placed a call to The Tiffany Club for help and I was the voice on the end of the line talking to this distraught woman to try and offer support and direction.

I explained to her that the current feelings of professionals is that a persons gender feelings can be mixed up before birth while a mother is still carrying the child. Exactly what happens is not known, but it is not anything that is deliberate that it's simply a natural hormonal process that effects some babies differently. I explained to her that it was important to work with professionals who have had experience with Transgendered patients and I was glad that she called us as we could recommend those professionals to her.

After running down the list of doctors by area, she selected Christine Becker who she worked with.

Christine has worked with other Trans children and has worked with not only the families and children, but also the school systems to help make them aware of the situation and sensitive to the needs of the student.

So after the February Vacation, the 10 year old returned to school as a boy and was pretty much accepted by his classmates who were pretty much aware that "she" was more "he" anyway.

So aside from the media trying to make a scandal out of this story, which I hope will die down, this young man has a pretty good handle on his future. I wish I had his courage when I was 10 years old to know what I really was inside and have people support me to become the woman I feel inside.

I bring this story up for 2 reasons: first to set the record straight about things you might have read about this story. And second to share with my Sisters how important it is to give of yourself as a Member of TCNE. Its my biggest thrill to help others who call, e-mail or I meet at events to try and help them become a more comfortable person.

There are so many people who are still in "the closet" and just need to have some small bit of support to coax them out. Were all self centered to a degree and we never pass a mirror without taking a look at ourselves to see how pretty we are. But It only takes a small amount of time to help someone out. One night a month, the TCNE Board meets and the phone rings. It never gets answered until one of the directors gets up from the meeting to pick it up. And yet we always have around 10 girls sitting around the club at that time. Maybe next time, someone will think of picking up the phone because they might be able to help somebody on the other end who is calling TCNE for help because they are alone and need help.

In closing, I want to thank Frances Cardullo who has worked on the improvement of the graphics of this publication. Frances has been working with me on Microsoft Publisher to make the newsletter look like a million bucks. Unfortunately for Frances, I'm a slow student. ## TRANS NEWS FROM AROUND THE WORLD

Dr. Judson Lively, a surgeon and one of Kaiser Permanente's leading Bay Area administrators, stood nervously before 100 colleagues in a Walnut Creek conference room Tuesday and told them it was no accident there were butterflies on his black tie.

Lively told them a fable that was in essence the story of his life, of being trapped inside the body of another, yearning for a transformation to be set free. "I stand here before you today to inform you of something that I have kept hidden from the world and virtually everyone else, with the exception of my family, for virtually my entire life," Lively, flanked by his wife and daughter, told the hushed crowd. "I'm 48 years old. For over 40 years I have known that I am a transsexual woman. My heart and soul really are those of a woman."

In two weeks, the surgeon will return to work as Dr. Judy Lively, physician-in-chief for more than 350,000 Kaiser patients, 550 doctors and 6,000 staff in most of Contra Costa County and part of Alameda County. She will trade her ties for scarves, wear subtle makeup and handmade beaded jewelry, and finally let her hair down. Lively is shedding the male persona she once worked so hard to cultivate -- Army surgeon, skydiver, whitewater kayaker - and will reemerge not as a new person but one who has always been there, hidden away.

While some transgender people take a "stealth" approach to their transitions -- leaving behind their old lives to reappear elsewhere as their new gender -- Lively's method is becoming more common, as society becomes more accepting and anti-discrimination laws are approved.

Lively said she had no choice but to make a very private decision public because she doesn't want to give up the job, home and family she loves. (From SF GATE)...

A Houston transgender woman has been sentenced to five years in prison for giving another transgender woman a fatal silicone injection meant to enlarge her breasts. Guadalupe Camarena could have faced up to life in prison after pleading guilty in October to aggravated assault in the 2003 death of 22-year-old Delfino Gonzalez. Gonzalez was one of four Houston transgenders who died in 2003 after undergoing the illegal procedure they sought as an alternative to hormone therapy. Silicone injections, which are not approved or offered by plastic surgeons, are also much cheaper than surgery. Gonzalez died three days after receiving the injection after the substance entered her bloodstream. Prosecutors said Camarena and others hosted parties in their homes, with guests paying up to $200 for silicone injections. Camarena said she was unaware of the health risks and injected silicone into her own chest. (From wire reports)...

Five months after its previous executive director stepped down after less than a year, the Human Rights Campaign on Wednesday hired longtime Washington insider Joe Solmonese as president of the group. He will start on April 11 and will be paid $225,000 per year. A Massachusetts native, Solmonese, 40, has been chief executive officer of Emily's List, a Washington group with a $40 million annual budget and 85 staffers that helps elect pro-choice female Democratic candidates to political office, since 2003.

our First Event staff.

My stomach at the time was starting to talk to me in angry tones. I had not eaten since lunch and it was about 6PM. I went into one of the ballrooms and observed that there was a cold and hot buffet laid out along with a bar. I helped myself to a nice bowl of seafood chowder with some oyster crackers. Not bad at all especially when you do not have to pay for it. The chowder it appeared was made with fish or clams from the Pacific. It was good, but I prefer New England style myself. Thank God it was not Manhattan style. I then went to the area where I saw the man in the chef's hat. There was another table covered with Alaskan King Crab legs, oysters that were being shucked, smoked salmon, and shrimp. I passed on the crab and the oysters since not very lady like trying to eat those in a public area and I would end up wearing it. However, I helped my self to the smoked salmon and the shrimp, which turned out to be very good. It always taste better when someone else pays for it. I was giving thought about trying my luck at the bar since I got the impression it was complementary. However, I have a rule when I am dressed and I am driving. I generally do not drink so I passed on it. If you are wondering about Barnes & Noble, I did go there and perused some of the selections in the history section for a while. Not a bad way to end a meal, but to have a meal for your mind by reading. When I was leaving Barnes & Noble, I saw an attractive lady in a skirt very similar to mind and I was following her for a little bit admiring the scenery of her legs. That was a meal for Debra's brother. This was proof that sometimes you can get a free lunch.

Transgendered Speaking Out In Harvard Square, a sign and a tempest at a tea shop

By Avi Steinberg, Globe Correspondent
March 27, 2005

Harvard President Larry Summers, who's been in hot water recently for his comments regarding women in the sciences, has found a friend.

Frances Cardullo, who runs the venerable Harvard Square institution Cardullo's Gourmet Shoppe, gave Summers a boost by placing this message on Cardullo's famed marquee: "Much Ado About Nothing: We Support Dr. Summers." Cardullo said she felt compelled to say something to end what she sees as madness.

"Unless there's something I don't know, this seems to be just a media frenzy over nothing," she said.

"I was up in Montreal and they had a half-an-hour TV segment about Summers. In Montreal! I said to myself, 'This is ridiculous, I have to put up a sign.'"

And what do the opinionated residents of 02138 have to say about all this?

"The fact is," argued Cambridge resident, newly arrived from Needham, Teddy Killian, 24, "the word 'support' is a bit vague.

"It's not necessarily the same thing as saying 'We agree with Dr. Summers.' Doesn't a mother support her child, come what may?"

The older generation took a practical perspective.

"It's just politics as usual," said former Cambridge resident Helena Marquez, 57, who now lives in Somerville.

"Summers might be weakened, but he's still the president of Harvard and he can still drop some pretty substantial crumbs to people who declare their undying loyalty. . . . If I had a marquee, I'd support him, too."

Cardullo, who has never put up a political sign before, transitioning four years ago from being "Frank" to "Frances." Her gender transformation puts her in a unique position to weigh in on Summers's controversial observations.

"Some could say that the guy in me is defending him. Not so. If nothing else, I am more attuned to the differences in the genders," she said. "I think he was just misinterpreted."

...transitioning four years ago from being "Frank" to "Frances."

Cheryl Nielen, 34, stood outside her favorite shop last Monday, unamused.

"I really wish they hadn't put that sign up there," she said.

Was she boycotting? "No," she said with regret. "I can't live without my Bizac Block of Goose Foie Gras. What choice do I have?"

Back in the store, Cardullo considered the public reaction.

"I wasn't there when they actually put up the sign," she said.

"Some students apparently yelled at her [the Cardullo's worker] as she was putting up the sign. I guess it's a more sensitive issue than I had realized.

"I might have opened up a Pandora's box here," she continued. "Not intentionally, though."
